Dear Adv Shaw,

NINETYDOCUMENTS

1. We refer to our discussion regarding the above.

2. In answer to your questions about NinetyDocuments, we would certainly be more inclined to take on Candidate Attorneys who could already demonstrate a drafting ability of that nature and would be more inclined to offer them positions as associates.

3. If they had problems paying for your training up front, then Our firm would be willing to consider an agreement regarding deduction from the salary as discussed.

4. Depending on our assessment of candidates available in a given year we may take on anything from 1-3 candidates across our offices in Johannesburg, PE and Plettenberg so we might sit with between 1 - 6 candidates at any one time depending on the prevailing circumstances and our needs at the time.

5. Our primary concern in choosing prospective candidates is in finding candidates who are able to bridge that gap from university to practice as easily and as quickly as possible. A drafting ability of this nature would clearly assist in dealing with that gap at the most important practical level.
